International Trade Theories and the Evolving International Economy

By R. A. Johns

St. Martin's Press, New York
Contents

List of Tables vi
List of Figures viii
Acknowledgements ix
Preface xi

Part I: Trade and the International Economy 1
1 Boundary-transcending technologies, trade development 4 and the micro-structural activities of firms
2 Borders, national industrial structures and international trade relations
3 The changing parameters of external trade: the integration and growth of the international economy in historical perspective

Part II: General Theoretical Approaches to the Explanation of Trade Flows 127
4 Methodological aspects of conventional explanations of international trade flows
5 The classical concept of comparative advantage: the cosmopolitan model of national industrial specialisation and international exchange
6 The neo-classical Heckscher-Ohlin theory 178
7 Post-Leontief orthodox trade explanations and models 203

Part III: The Structural Transformation of the International Trading System and Analyses of Specific Economic Relationships 225
8 International 'competitiveness' and 'revealed' comparative advantage
9 Modern industrial trade structures and their new orientations for trade theory
10 The analysis of dependent trade relationships as an outcome of international exchange

Appendix The fragmentation of sovereignty: countries of the world by region, year of independence, and size of population 283

Bibliography 287
Index 317

All italics used in quotations are original to their respective authors.